

House 2

House Two is a tall contemporary home overlooking a busy river path and the city beyond. Its narrow site uses height well, with three bright floors connected by an open staircase. The ground level contains a studio, laundry room, and secure garage for two cars. Upstairs, the main floor combines a generous kitchen, dining space, and lounge beside a balcony. The top floor holds three bedrooms, including a main suite with a dressing room and private bath. Windows face west, filling the interior with late afternoon light and changing skyline views. The outdoor area is compact but dramatic: a roof terrace offers seating, containers, and room for evening meals. The house relies on smart storage, durable finishes, and efficient equipment, so its polished look remains practical. Cafes, offices, transit, and galleries are close enough for a mostly car free routine. This setting suits people who enjoy entertaining, quick commutes, and urban energy. It offers more vertical space, more visual drama, and more access to activity, while asking residents to accept stairs, street noise, and a faster pace. Careful design keeps each level calm, functional, and connected to the surrounding neighborhood every day through changing seasons and schedules comfortably.
